

Essential for Employment and Independence

Reliable and affordable transportation is critical for individuals to access competitive integrated employment and community life.

Planning and Training is Key

The transition IEP should address transportation including needs, available options, travel skills, and collaboration with schools, families, and transportation providers

Funding is Available

There is funding for transportation. Vocational Rehabilitation is a great source for vehicle modification and public and private travel costs.

Advocacy Efforts Improve Access

Local groups, comprised of transportation providers, policy makers, and individuals with disabilities and families, can advocate for expanded transportation solutions.

Explore ALL Options

Depending on what is available within a community, there may be many options to explore, including public transit, ride shares, churches, neighbors, co-workers, friends, family, and more.
